Biffy the Bear was a fictional character who had his own comic strip in the British comic The Beano. Biffy was an anthropomorphic bear resembling Mickey Mouse who gained the front cover of the comic starting from issue 327, dated 24 January 1948, replacing Big Eggo. This page is reprinted in "The Dandy and The Beano: More From the First Fifty Years", the second of the Golden Years (later 60 Years) series. His human friend Buster appeared with him later in the 1950s. A story reprinted in Classics from the Comics in August 2008 was titled Biffy and Buster. This was a full page, from 1957. As Biffy was the cover star at the time, and Buster's name was never in the title, this must be from The Beano Book 1957, not an issue of the comic.

Dudley D. Watkins drew Biffy from the character's debut in 1948 to his sudden death on 20 August 1969, after which David Sutherland replaced him. He remained on the front cover until issue 1677, dated 7 September 1974. Dennis the Menace took over as from the following week, and Biffy was relegated to the inside pages. In the late 1970s, Sutherland stopped drawing Biffy, and the strip was taken over by Jimmy Glen.

Between 1976 and 1979 a spin off of Biffy the Bear appeared in the newly revived Magic Comic. This spinoff starred Biffy's two nephews Cuddly and Dudley and often had guest appearances by Biffy himself. Biffy's nephew also often featured in Biffy's Beano comic strips as well.

His strip was retired in the 1980s (with his final appearance coming in issue no 2310, dated 25 October 1986, by which time it had been reduced to a single line of four pictures. However, the strip came back in 1989 with the title shortened to just 'Biffy'. The format had been revamped to three or four frames over a page with no speech, often depicting Biffy in fantastical, surreal situations. These strips were mostly drawn by Sid Burgon, though Trevor Metcalfe contributed a few stories as well, including in the Beano Book 1994. In the Beano Book 1999 Milly O'Naire (from Milly O'Naire and Penny Less, from the IPC Jackpot comic) made a guest appearance as well as her dad. This was probably because Sid Burgon had previously drawn that strip as well.

More recently Biffy was seen in a four-part special leading a group of retired characters, Pansy Potter, Keyhole Kate and Desert Island Dick, to return The Beano to an earlier form (specifically, the 1960s, the logo from that era was used in the story).

Biffy returned again in 2013 in the Funsie Funnies pages of the Beano. He is currently drawn by Wayne Thompson.
